Conjoint marital psychotherapy; couples group therapy; group therapy for singles wanting relationship; training and supervision of licensed psychotherapists in Imago Relationship Therapy; consultation to other professionals and community leaders regarding human behavior and relationships.

Present Specialty: Couples therapy

Since 1989, I have studied extensively in New York under Harville Hendrix, Ph.D., who founded the Imago International Institute and innovated the theory of couples therapy called Imago Relationship Therapy. My wife, Francine C. Beauvoir, Ph.D., also a licensed psychologist, practices with me. We have put on over 300 weekend workshops for couples and have trained therapists mostly in the United States, but also in France, New Zealand, Australia, Norway, and Croatia. We are both Certified Imago Relationship Therapists, Workshop Presenters, and are on the faculty of the Imago International Institute. We became Emeritus status in 1917 when we retired.

Theoretical Orientation

I practice Imago Relationship Therapy (IRT) which is a unique blend of Psychodynamic, Gestalt, and Cognitive/Behavioral Therapy. IRT sees the committed, intimate relationship as the best place to realize the deepest levels of growth and healing. IRT is the only form of therapy I choose to practice. As a psychotherapist, I desire to facilitate clients to find healing from childhood wounds, to eliminate debilitating symptoms, to realize personal potential and creative expression, and to experience wholeness and full aliveness. For more information about this form of therapy, read Harville Hendrix's best seller called, "Getting The Love You Want: A Guide For Couples." M. Scott Peck says of it, "I know of no better guide for couples who genuinely desire a maturing relationship."

Even though I have had a theological education, I am a secular humanist and seek to discover an understanding of the world through scientific inquiry and the use of reason. I am non-religious and espouse no belief in transcendent entities that transcend ordinary experience. I see life as meaningful and am committed to moral principles derived from critical intelligence and human experience, pursuing positive ideals.
